

HUME CENTER FOR WRITING AND SPEAKING

Meet Hume Tutor Charlotte Hull. We regularly profile one of the wonderful Hume oral communication or writing tutors on our Facebook page and on our Tutor.

Ethical work. Candidates should also have experience developing instructional and tutoring methods for diverse student populations. Crew has helped students at every stage of the process: from brainstorming ideas to fine-tuning an almost-complete presentation, bringing it to the next level. Drop-in tutoring is its own fulfilling routine. Still, with all of us working to get the word out, we conducted only about tutorials during the remaining terms of that year. These documents, along with any inquiries to the search committee, should be submitted by email to: Guy Margard. They sign in, sit beside me, explain their assignment and we get to work. At Thursday English Afternoons, multilingual learners connect with tutors and improve their English communication skills. So take a peek into Building today. Everyone is welcoming, super friendly and not judgmental. I love seeing familiar faces and fellow tutors working with students in the lounge. Then, on March 5 there will be another wellness event featuring tea, scones and personal affirmations. As the writing and rhetoric requirement places increased emphasis on oral and multimedia elements, the Director should have experience and interest in these areas. I said a few words and told the audience, as I have told many others, that building the Center was the most fun and exciting thing I was able to do in my very long career. We also heard from former and current tutors, some of whom wrote in with special greetings and reminiscences. Necessary work. Your support makes a difference in helping give staff members from all backgrounds the opportunity to develop important professional skills and conduct meaningful reporting. Located opposite Green Library at Building in Main Quad, the Hume Center for Writing and Speaking is just the place to take a breather, get some work done or chat with a tutor about writing or speaking projects. To celebrate the occasion, Interim Director Sarah Pittock and her Hume Center team organized a panel about the Center, chaired by Wendy Goldberg along with John Tinker, whom we miss every day, Wendy was first Co-Director of the Center and featuring talks by people involved in the Center, past and present. As a drop-in tutor, I spend a lot of time here. Keep it up! In the past, the Hume Center has featured comedy workshops, read-ins honoring Nobel Laureates like Toni Morrison, magazine releases and more. Ability to oversee and direct staff, manage budgets and develop financial plans. Up next is a Family Weekend open mic night on Feb. As always, I am inspired and moved by the strength and commitment and brilliance of college students, who make me glad and grateful, every single day, that I have been able to spend my life among them. Happy Anniversary, Hume Center, and greetings to all those who work to support writing centers across this country and far beyond. Walk around or venture into the lounge. Primary responsibilities include providing leadership in developing and sustaining the varied mission of the Center, managing day-to-day operations, overseeing an undergraduate peer tutor preparation course, supervising a large corps of undergraduate and graduate writing consultants, and working collaboratively with PWR lecturers who tutor in the Center. While you're here All contributions are tax-deductible. But the idea that you need a finished draft to meet with a tutor is a myth. All candidates should submit the following supplemental materials for review by the committee: At least 3 letters of recommendation, an example of writing related to scholarship or writing program administration, and a statement of philosophy regarding writing center pedagogy. Good work. We were tucked away into a basement naturally, and while the space was really nice completely renovated, students had a hard time finding us. Best of all, Zandra Jordan, who is joining Stanford this fall as Director of the Hume Center, was on hand for the occasion so that we all got to spend a bit of time with her and soak up some of her energy. We're a student-run organization committed to providing hands-on experience in journalism, digital media and business for the next generation of reporters. I remember booking my first session with an OCT back in sophomore year. Are you looking for a drop-in tutor? Shaded windows, bright paintings and flyers line half the room, and the other half contains built-in whiteboards perfect for brainstorming ideas and mapping essays. On May 11 of this year, the renamed Hume Center for Writing and Speaking celebrated fifteen years of building and sustaining a culture of writing at Stanford. I left campus positively glowing with energy and excitement and a sense of hope, which is in short supply in these dark days of the Trump debacle. And before that, there was a writing wellness event, part of a wellness initiative through iThrive that includes upcoming
